

COVID-19 Update

The COVID-19 pandemic continues to be a concern for many different organizations. At the Major League Baseball Players Alumni Association (MLBPAA), we are aware of the virus and are addressing a number of issues regarding our organizational practices moving forward. Updates will be added to this space as we are able.

As of now, the MLBPAA has taken the following steps:

- Continuing to monitor the outbreak in our scheduled event locations, and considering the severity in regard to each event. The safety and well-being of our former player members, event and clinic attendees and employees is our top priority. As of now, MLBPAA events and their status moving forward are being decided on a location by location basis.
- For our clinics and events that are moving forward, we are continuing to follow rigorous sanitation practices, including frequently disinfecting all equipment used.
- Encouraging all event and clinic attendees who have flu-like symptoms to stay home.

The MLBPAA is monitoring the rapidly changing situation daily and will make its decisions based upon the best available information and direction provided by government, public health and other decisional authorities.
